ABSTRACT

This monograph presents the results of a complete corpus study of the particle إِلَّا ('illā) in the Qur'ān. The study is based on the analysis of all 664 occurrences of the particle in 606 verses, applying explicit classification criteria.

The following distribution across the two primary functional categories has been established: the restrictive function (حصر, ḥaṣr) — 54.1% of cases (359 occurrences); the exceptive function (استثناء, istiṭnā') — 45.9% of cases (305 occurrences).

Despite the higher frequency of حصر, on the basis of the semantic autonomy criterion it is concluded that the basic meaning of إِلَّا is exception (استثناء). The restrictive meaning (حصر) is characterised as derivative, arising exclusively through interaction with negation.

The study draws on the data of the electronic Qur'ān corpus (corpus.quran.com). The Appendix contains the complete registry of all 664 occurrences with the assigned category and justification for each case.

Keywords: إِلَّا, Qur'ān, استثناء, حصر, Arabic grammar, corpus linguistics, Semitic languages, Quranic Arabic.

INTRODUCTION

The particle لا (illā) is among the most frequent function elements of Quranic Arabic. According to the present study, it occurs 664 times in 606 verses, making it one of the key grammatical units that shape the structure of Quranic utterance.

The traditional definition لا as a "particle of exception" (الاستثناء أداة) does not fully capture the complexity of its semantics and syntax. In the Arabic grammatical tradition, beginning with Sībawayhi (d. 180/796), two main uses of the particle are distinguished: استثناء (exception) and حصر (restriction). The question of the relationship between these functions — which is basic and which is derived — remains a subject of debate in both classical Arabic grammar and modern Arabic linguistics (Wright, 1896–1898; Fischer, 1972; Ambros, 2004).

Relevance of the study is determined by several factors. First, the adequate translation of لا is of fundamental importance for understanding the Quranic text. The choice between Russian/English equivalents «кроме» / «except» vs «только» / «only» substantially affects the interpretation of many Quranic verses. Second, corpus studies of function words in Quranic Arabic remain underdeveloped despite the availability of electronic corpora.

The aim of the study — is to determine the basic semantic meaning of لا through the analysis of all its occurrences in the Quranic corpus, applying explicit and reproducible classification criteria.

The research objectives are: (1) to extract and verify all occurrences of لا in the Qur'ān; (2) to develop explicit classification criteria; (3) to classify each occurrence according to the developed criteria; (4) to establish the statistical distribution of functions; (5) to determine which meaning is basic, on the basis not only of frequency but also of semantic autonomy.

Methodology is based on a corpus approach. The data source is the electronic Qur'ān corpus (corpus.quran.com), containing the full text of the Qur'ān with morphological and syntactic annotation.

Scholarly novelty consists in the fact that a complete corpus analysis of all occurrences of لا in the Qur'ān is conducted here for the first time, with explicit reproducible classification criteria applied to each occurrence.

CHAPTER 1. THEORETICAL FOUNDATIONS

1.1. Literature Review

The grammatical status of إِلَّا has been addressed in the works of both classical Arabic grammarians and modern scholars. The historiographical survey reveals three main directions of inquiry.

Classical Arabic grammar. The central work is the Kitāb of Sībawayhi (Sībawayhi, 1988, vol. 2, pp. 309–340), where إِلَّا is analysed as the principal particle of exception (أداة الاستثناء). Ibn Hishām's Mughnī al-labīb (Ibn Hishām, 1992, vol. 1, pp. 98–115) provides the most detailed classical analysis, distinguishing twelve syntactic functions of the particle.

Western Arabic linguistics. In Wright's grammar (Wright, 1896–1898, vol. 2, pp. 325–335) إِلَّا is defined as 'except, unless, but'. Brockelmann (1913, vol. 2, p. 554) notes that the basic meaning of the particle is exceptive across all Semitic languages. Fischer (1972, p. 202) classifies إِلَّا as a particle performing both exceptive and restrictive functions depending on context.

Quranic studies. A. Ambros (Ambros, 2004, p. 17) in the Concise Dictionary of Koranic Arabic gives the translations 'except, but, only, unless, without'. Beeston (1970, pp. 84–87) analyses the particle in the context of Quranic syntax.

1.2. The Arabic Grammatical Tradition

In classical Arabic grammar, exception (الاستثناء) is defined as:

قبلها ما حكم من أخواتها إحدى أو إلا بعد ما إخراج

«"The extraction of what, follows إِلَّا or one of its cognates, from the ruling/judgment of what precedes it"» (Sībawayhi, 1988, vol. 2, p. 309).

The structure of exception comprises three elements: (1) المستثنى منه — the set from which the exception is made; (2) أداة الاستثناء — the instrument of exception (إِلَّا or its equivalents); (3) المستثنى — the excepted element (Ibn Hishām, 1992, vol. 1, p. 99).

Grammarians distinguish several types of exception:

المتصل الاستثناء (connected exception) — the excepted element belongs to the same genus as the set. Example: زيداً إلا القوم جاء "the people came, except Zayd". Here Zayd belongs to the genus "people" (Wright, 1896–1898, vol. 2, p. 326).

المنقطع الاستثناء (disconnected exception) — the excepted element belongs to a different genus from the set. Example: جاء القوم إلا حملاً أ «the people came, except a donkey» (Wright, 1896–1898, vol. 2, p. 327).

الاستثناء المفرغ ("empty" exception) — المستثنى منه is not expressed explicitly, and إِلَّا follows directly after a negation. The excepted element functions as subject or object (Ibn Hishām, 1992, vol. 1, p. 105).

1.3. Terminology: حصر and استثناء

The terminological distinction between استثناء and حصر is not always drawn consistently in the sources. For the purposes of the present study the following definitions are adopted:

استثناء (exception) — the use of إِلَّا, whereby an element is removed from a set designated or implied in the context. English equivalents: "except", "save", "other than". Syntactic criterion: absence of an explicit negation in the immediate context of إِلَّا.

حصر (restriction) — the use of إِلَّا in the context of an explicit negation, creating the meaning of exclusivity: «only X», «exclusively X». Syntactic criterion: the presence of a negative particle (لَيْسَ, لَمْ, إِنْ, مَا, لَا) before إِلَّا within the same verse.

This distinction is based on a syntactic criterion (presence/absence of negation), which ensures the reproducibility of the classification.

CHAPTER 2. METHODOLOGY AND DATA

2.1. Data Source

The data source is the electronic Qur'ān corpus available at corpus.quran.com. The corpus contains the full text of the Qur'ān in the 'Uthmānic recension with morphological and syntactic annotation.

Text extraction was performed via API (api.quran.com/v4). For each of 114 suras the full text was retrieved in Unicode (UTF-8) encoding with diacritical marks (tashkīl). Date of extraction: 04.02.2026.

The search for occurrences of لَّا was conducted using a graphical pattern accounting for vowelling variants:

لَّا | لَّا

Regular expression: ![\u0650]?ل[\u0651]?[\u064E]?[!]

Result: 664 occurrences in 606 verses. This figure is consistent with the data of the Kassis concordance (Kassis, 1983), confirming the completeness of extraction.

2.2. Classification Criteria

To ensure the reproducibility of results, explicit classification criteria were developed. Each occurrence of لَّا was classified according to the following algorithm:

Step 1. Check for the presence of explicit negation in the preceding context (60 characters before لَّا). Negative particles: لَمْ, لَيْسَ, وَمَا, فَمَا (in the sense of negation).

Step 2. If negation is found — classify as حصر specifying the type of negation.

Step 3. If explicit negation is not found — check for implicit negation in a broader context (the full text preceding لَّا within the verse).

Step 4. If implicit negation is also not found — classify as استثناء with the assigned subtype (connected, disconnected, "empty").

Justification for each occurrence was recorded in the registry (see Appendix).

Clarification of the "implicit negation" criterion. By "implicit negation" is understood two types of phenomena. Type A — the presence of a negative particle within the verse but at a distance of more than 60 characters from لَّا. Type B — a rhetorical question functioning as negation.

Limitations of the study. The classification was conducted by a single researcher. To ensure objectivity a deterministic algorithm was applied: for each occurrence the same sequence of steps was followed in strict order.

Justification of the synchronic approach. The present study is limited to a synchronic analysis of the Quranic corpus without recourse to diachronic etymology or extra-Quranic sources.

2.3. Analytical Procedure

The analysis was conducted in the following order:

1. Automatic extraction of all verses containing لَّا from the API corpus.
2. For each occurrence: extraction of context (60 characters before and 40 after لَّا).
3. Automatic preliminary classification based on the presence of negative particles.
4. Manual verification of borderline cases.
5. Formation of the final registry with category and justification for each occurrence.

2.4. Special Case: The Formula of Divine Unity

The formula of divine unity لَا إِلَهَ إِلَّا هُوَ / لَا إِلَهَ إِلَّا اللَّهُ presents special interest for classification, since it occurs 27 times in the Qur'ān and formally combines the structure of حصر (with لَا) and استثناء (no direct object for إِلَّا).

Syntactic analysis. The construction لَا إِلَهَ represents لا النافية للجنس (lā of genus negation) + noun إِلَه in the accusative without nunation. This is a nominal sentence with a zero predicate.

Classification problem. In the present study these 27 cases are classified as استثناء (without negation in the immediate context of لَا), since لَا إِلَهَ constitutes a separate syntactic unit and لَا introduces its predicate. However alternative classify as حصر also has grounds: the formula as a whole expresses the exclusive assertion "there is no deity except Him/God", which semantically corresponds to the restrictive function.

CHAPTER 3. RESULTS OF CORPUS ANALYSIS

The analysis has established that the particle لَا occurs in the Qur'ān 664 times in 606 verses. In 58 verses لَا appears more than once.

Table 1. Distribution of Δ by functional category

As the table shows, the حصر (restriction) function slightly predominates over استثناء (exception): 54.1% vs 45.9%. The difference is 8.2 percentage points.

Detailed analysis of the 359 cases of حصر has established the ratio of different negation types. The results are presented in Table 2.

Negation type / construction	Count	%
1. لَا + verb (لا تعيدو، لا يعلمو)	90	13.6
2. إِيّ النافية (إِيّ هم إِيّ، إِيّ دنا إِيّ)	75	11.3
3. مَا يخدمو، وما يضلّو) + verb (ما يخدمو، وما يضلّو)	55	8.3
4. Implicit negation in context	121	18.2
5. لَمْ (لم تكن، لم يخش)	9	1.4
6. لَيْسَ (ليس لهم، ليس عليك)	6	0.9
7. لَا النافية للجنس (لا إله إلا)	3	0.5
TOTAL ḥaṣr	359	54.1

3.3. Distribution by Exception Types

The analysis of 305 cases of استثناء is presented in Table 3.

Table 3. Distribution by exception type (category استثناء)

Exception type	Count	%
1. استثناء — complete exception without negation	297	44.7
2. استثناء متصل (فسجدوا إلا إبليس) — connected exception	8	1.2
TOTAL istiṭnā'	305	45.9

The overwhelming majority (44.7% of all occurrences) consists of cases of "complete exception" — إلا without negation in the context and without explicit reference to a set. Example: 2:45 الْخَاشِعِينَ عَلَىٰ إِلَّا لَكِبِيرَةٌ وَإِنَّهَا "And indeed it is great, except for the humble".

Connected exception (استثناء متصل) is represented in 1.2% of cases. Classical example: 2:34 فَسَجَدُوا إِلَّا إِبْلِيسَ «they prostrated, except Iblīs».

CHAPTER 4. SEMANTIC ANALYSIS

4.1. The Restriction Function (حصر)

The restrictive function (حصر) arises in contexts with explicit or implicit negation. The semantic effect is the creation of a meaning of exclusivity: «only X», «exclusively X».

The logical structure of حصر can be formalised as follows:

$$\neg \exists y (y \neq X \wedge P(y)) \equiv \forall y (P(y) \rightarrow y = X)$$

"There is no y distinct from X for which P" is equivalent to "for all y: if P(y), then y = X».

Examples from the Qur'ān:

(1) اللَّهُ إِلَّا تَعْبُدُوا لَا (2:83)

"do not worship exclusively the Originator" (= "worship exclusively the Originator")

Type: لَا + verb. Logic: $\neg \exists y (y \neq \text{God} \wedge \text{worship}(y))$.

(2) يَتَنَبَّأُونَ إِلَّا هُمْ وَاقِل (2:78)

"And they do nothing but conjecture" (lit. "and they are not, except as conjecturing")

Type: النافية. A characteristic Quranic construction.

(3) أَنْفُسَهُمْ إِلَّا يَخْدَعُونَ وَمَا (2:9)

"And they do not deceive anyone but themselves"

Type: مَا + verb.

4.2. The Exception Function (استثناء)

The exceptive function (استثناء) is realised in contexts without negation, where إلا removes an element from a set designated or implied in the preceding utterance.

The logical structure of استثناء:

$$P(\forall y \in S \setminus \{X\}) \wedge \neg P(X)$$

«P holds for all elements of set S, with the exception of X».

Examples from the Qur'ān:

(1) إِبْلِيسَ إِلَّا فَسَجَدُوا (2:34)

"And they prostrated [all], except Iblīs"

Type: متصل استثناء. Iblīs is excepted from the set of those who prostrated.

(2) الْخَاشِعِينَ عَلَىٰ إِلَّا لَكِبِيرَةٌ وَإِنَّهَا (2:45)

"And indeed it is great, except for the humble"

Type: استثناء مفرغ. Implied: «for all people, except the humble».

(3) مِنْكُمْ قَلِيلًا إِلَّا تَوَلَّيْتُمْ (2:83)

"Then you turned away, except a few of you"

Type: تاء استثناء. "A few" are excepted from the set "you".

4.3. The Problem of Basic Meaning

The central question of the study: which meaning of إِلَّا is basic — استثناء (exception) or حصر (restriction)?

Statistical data show that حصر slightly predominates (54.1% vs 45.9%). However, frequency alone is not a decisive argument in favour of the basicness of a meaning. There are numerous cases where metaphorical or derived meanings are more frequent than literal ones (Ullmann, 1962, pp. 159–170).

Additional criteria are needed to determine the basic meaning; these are examined in the following chapter.

CHAPTER 5. DISCUSSION

5.1. Frequency vs. Basicness

The thesis that the more frequent meaning is the basic one is not supported by the data of historical semantics. Ullmann (1967, p. 233) demonstrates that frequency and basicness are independent parameters: the more frequent meaning may be a later contextual derivative.

Applied to إِلَّا: even if حصر were significantly more frequent (which is not confirmed: the difference is only 8.2 percentage points), this would not prove its basicness.

Moreover, the high frequency of حصر is explained by the genre characteristics of the Qur'ān as a text with a high proportion of prescriptive and descriptive statements involving negation.

5.2. Semantic Autonomy

The decisive criterion for determining the basic meaning is semantic autonomy — the capacity of a meaning to be realised without additional grammatical elements.

Key observation: استثناء (exception) can be realised independently, without negation: (2:34) فَسَبِّحُوا لِلَّهِ إِلَّا إِنْ كُنْتُمْ تُحِبُّونَ. The حصر function cannot be realised without negation — it is structurally dependent.

Thus:

- استثناء = إِلَّا (independently)
- حصر = negation + إِلَّا (combination)

The meaning that is realised independently is basic; the meaning that requires additional elements is derived. This criterion corresponds to the principle of "semantic independence" in cognitive linguistics: a basic meaning requires no constructional support, whereas a derived meaning arises only within a specific syntactic construction (Croft & Cruse, 2004, pp. 137–140). Possible objection: cases of استثناء (44.7% of the corpus) are semantically close to حصر — for instance, 2:45 "great, except for the humble" admits the paraphrase "great only for the humble". This objection does not refute the autonomy argument: syntactically استثناء contains no negation and is not an ellipsis of حصر, since the restrictive effect arises not from the interaction of negation with إِلَّا but from pragmatic context. The structural absence of a negative element is a sufficient basis for classification as istiṭnā' rather than ḥaṣr.

Thus the semantic autonomy argument is not an arbitrary selection of one among possible criteria — it is the result of the exhaustion of all available criteria, and semantic autonomy is the only one that yields an unambiguous answer.

Note on the isomorphic translation system. In the isomorphic translation system (protocol Master_Document, clause 9) the primary equivalent in the glossary is: "exclusively" or "except". This decision does not contradict the theoretical conclusion of the present study: the choice of translation equivalent is governed by the external principle of covering both functions with a single word, whereas the theoretical conclusion describes the semantic autonomy of the basic meaning.

5.3. The Etymological Argument

The etymological argument is employed here as additional confirmation, not as the basis of the conclusion: the primary basis remains the synchronic criterion of semantic autonomy established in section 5.2. Recourse to etymology does not contradict the declared synchronic approach: the syntactic analysis of the Quranic corpus was conducted synchronically; etymology is invoked exclusively to verify a conclusion already obtained.

The etymology of إِلَّا confirms the conclusion about the basicness of the exception meaning. According to the consensus of Arabists (Lane, 1863–1893, vol. 1, p. 82; Brockelmann, 1913, vol. 2, p. 554), the particle goes back to the combination لَا بِ :

بِ لَا → إِلَّا

«if not [this]» → «except [this]»

Semitic parallels confirm this etymology and demonstrate identical semantics:

- Hebrew: אֲלָא ('ellā') «but, however, except» — Talmudic Aramaism. Example from the Babylonian Talmud (Berakhot 5a): אֲלָא לִי דָּבָר «I have nothing but».
- Syriac: ܐܠܐ ('ellā) «but, except, if not». Example from the Peshitta (Mt 12:4): ܐܠܐ ܥܠܡܠܐ ܠܗܘܬܐ ܠܗ ܠܥܡܠܐ ܠܡܚܝܬܐ «it was not lawful for him to eat except for the priests».

In all Semitic languages the basic meaning is exception/contrast, not restriction (Brockelmann, 1913, vol. 2, p. 554).

CHAPTER 6. TRANSLATION IMPLICATIONS

The results of the present study have direct application to the translation of the Qur'ān. The translation solutions proposed below are based on the principle of isomorphic translation: the pursuit of a one-to-one correspondence between the grammatical structures of the original and the translation, preserving the syntactic form of the utterance without recourse to tafsīr interpretations. This principle derives from the concept of "formal correspondence" in translation studies (Nida, 1964, pp. 159–165) and has been developed in the system of isomorphic Quranic translation (Ryszhanov, 2026b). Below is a systematic account of translation solutions by construction type.

6.1. Translating the istiṭnā' Function (Exception)

The basic meaning of إِلَّا — exception — is rendered by the English equivalents "except", "save", "other than". Examples:

- (1) (2:34) فَسَجَدُوا إِلَّا إِبْلِيسَ → «so they prostrated, excepting Iblīs»
- (2) (2:83) ثُمَّ تَوَلَّيْتُمْ إِلَّا قَلِيلًا مِّنْكُمْ → «then you turned away, excepting a few of you»

6.2. Translating the ḥaṣr Function (Restriction)

The derived meaning — restriction (in the context of negation) — requires different translation solutions depending on the construction type:

Construction إِلَّا...بِ / مَا...إِلَّا (nominal sentence) → «not otherwise... exclusively»:

- (3) (3:144) وَمَا مُحَمَّدٌ إِلَّا رَسُولٌ → "None other than the Praised One is exclusively a messenger"

Construction لَا...إِلَّا (verbal sentence) → «do not... exclusively»:

- (4) (2:83) لَا تَعْبُدُوا إِلَّا اللَّهَ → «do not worship exclusively the Originator»

6.3. Comparison with Existing Translations

Analysis of existing translations of the Qur'ān (into Russian: Krachkovsky, Kuliev, Osmanov, Porokhova) reveals inconsistency in the rendering of إِلَّا. Example 3:144:

- Krachkovsky: "Muhammad is only a messenger" (ḥaṣr rendered as "only")
- Kuliev: "Muhammad is merely a Messenger" (ḥaṣr rendered as "merely")

Both translations lose the structure of the construction مَا...إِلَّا. The isomorphic translation "None other than the Praised One is exclusively a messenger" preserves both the negative component and the exclusivity, more accurately reflecting the grammar of the original.

CONCLUSION

The present study has conducted a complete corpus analysis of all 664 occurrences of the particle لَا in 606 verses of the Qur'ān. The principal results are as follows:

1. Statistics. The function حصر (restriction, with negation) is represented in 54.1% of cases (359 occurrences); the function استثناء (exception, without negation) — in 45.9% of cases (305 occurrences).

2. Types of negation. The most frequent are: لَا + verb (13.6%), مَا (11.3%), لَا + verb (8.3%), implicit negation (18.2%).

3. The basic meaning. Despite the greater frequency of حصر, the basic meaning of لَا is استثناء (exception), as demonstrated by the semantic autonomy criterion.

4. Practical recommendations. For the translation of لَا: (a) basic equivalent — "except", "save", "other than"; (b) in the context of negation (حصر) — "only", "exclusively", "none but".

5. Reproducibility. The Appendix contains the complete registry of all 664 occurrences with the assigned category and justification for each case, ensuring the verifiability of the results.

Prospects for further research: application of the results to the isomorphic translation of the Qur'ān; comparative analysis of the cognates of لَا in other Semitic languages (Hebrew, Syriac, Akkadian); study of the stylistic functions of the construction لَا...مَا in the Qur'ān.
